Community Foundation awards six grants to nonprofits

Methodist nurses create costumes for NICU babies

Kaitlyn Bothwell's daughter, Kennedy, will spend her first Halloween in the neonatal intensive care unit (NICU) in the Women's & Children's Pavilion at Methodist Le Bonheur Germantown Hospital.

"Open up your eyes, sweet girl," Kaitlyn Bothwell, 26, whispered to her 7-day-old baby Kennedy Jay Bothwell. "This is your first photo shoot." Quiet coo sounds came from the room in the neonatal intensive care unit as Kennedy Jay opened and closed her eyes, blinking into the light from a nearby window. Several photographers tiptoed around the infant radial warmer to capture the newborn in her Halloween costume, a delicate pair of monarch butterfly wings.

Tuesday, nurses in the neonatal intensive care unit (NICU) in the Women's & Children's Pavilion at Methodist Le Bonheur Germantown Hospital dressed their tiny patients in costumes to celebrate Halloween. Other costumes included a pirate and a scuba diver, an avocado and a trio of sauce packets from Taco Bell.

The nurses of the NICU wing made Halloween costumes for each of the 25 babies currently in their care in an effort to make the parents feel more at home.

"With the commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., the Community Foundation of felt like we had a responsibility to respond to the question of where Memphis will go from here," said Sutton Mora Hayes, executive vice president and COO of the Community Foundation of Greater Memphis. "Because the National Civil Rights Museum was leading that charge, and we as an organization were born in the wake of that, we thought that as a fair and neutral gathering point, we were in a position to answer that question."

As part of the Community Foundation of Greater Memphis's MLK50: The Next Step Forward, the board of directors approved $150,000 in grant funding to six nonprofits.
Diversity starts at the top level at Methodist Le Bonheur Healthcare

CHRISTIN YATES
Special to The Daily News
Editor’s Note: Michael Ugwuueke, president/CEO, Methodist Le Bonheur Healthcare, and four other panelists will share their thoughts and perspective on diversity in the workplace at Leadership Memphis’ 11th annual Multicultural Breakfast and diversity panel with the theme “ROI of Diversity,” Friday, Nov. 2, at Holiday Inn - University of Memphis.

Other panelists include Dr. Reginald Coopwood, president and CEO of Regional One Health; Carolyn Hardy, president and CEO of Chism Hardy LLC; Jim Meeks, President & CEO of MarketCenter; Northwestern Mutual Memphis; and David Popwell, president/COO, First Tennessee Bank. The event will be moderated by Otis Sanford.

At Methodist Le Bonheur Healthcare, diversity has always been part of the hospital’s DNA. When Michael Ugwuueke, DHA, FACHE, joined the team in 2017 as president and chief executive officer, he was tasked with continuing the momentum that propelled diversity and inclusion throughout the health system.

"Starting at the top level, diversity permeates through the organization.

We have to reflect the community we serve, particularly in health care,” Ugwuueke said. "It's important for us to reflect the community and the culture we're serving on a daily basis so people feel like they're being heard and understood."

For Ugwuueke, diversity begins with recruiting. Usually going through a search firm for executive positions, he makes it known that he wants to see a diverse slate of candidates.

"I go further to tell them that I don't want a convenient sample," he said. "Using that approach, you have the opportunity to see a wide range of qualified candidates and select the best person."

The board of directors of Methodist Le Bonheur Healthcare is also diverse. Being a faith-based organization, there are religious leaders as well as business people and community members who make up the 24-person board. Similarly, the system leadership council is diverse.

"From my perspective, diversity is more than racial composition," Ugwuueke said. "Unless you have the ability to factor everyone's input, then there are some areas or blind spots that you're not addressing because you're not aware of them."

Methodist’s diversity requirements go beyond the health care system itself into vendor relationships. Ugwuueke encourages Methodist’s vendors to be diverse and looks for opportunities to work with minority- and female-owned businesses.

"In 1999, we spent about $4.4 million with minority- and women-owned businesses, which was about 4 percent of eligible spend," Ugwuueke said. "We didn't think that was enough. Now we spend over $38.7 million in direct and subcontracted women- and minority-owned business, which is 21 percent of general expense. This is just another intentional effort to make sure diversity doesn't stop with just the hospital."

Methodist conducts an organization.

organizations. Recipients represent six areas of public interest including poverty, higher wages, decent housing, quality education, justice and peace.

"We have to recognize what happened, but we have to think about what’s next. That was the genesis of creating this grant—we wanted to find which organizations are addressing these pillars in a new and catalytic way," said Hayes.

Earlier in 2018, the Community Foundation called for applications for six, $25,000 grants to be awarded in six areas that reflect the Martin Luther King Jr.'s dedication to social justice work. Out of the 43 applications received, the Community Foundation narrowed it down to six recipients: Neighbor Christian Centers, Tech901, United Housing, Gestalt Community Schools, Just City and the Mid-South Peace and Justice Center.

"The Community Foundation has put this first set of dollars out there, but we hope that it is the beginning of a longer community conversation that starts to address the question of, "Where do we go from here?" said Hayes. "It's important to not lose the momentum and coalescence that has come around MLK50."

One recipient, Tech901, has a mission to develop, grow and diversify the talent pool in Memphis through technology courses and training. The organization intentionally recruits students of color, of low- and middle-income backgrounds and women to support the accessibility and growth of Memphians in technology. Through the grant, Tech901 will be able to fund one class of 48 students for IT Foundations, a 12-week course offered for $100 per student.

"We've had a lot of success in our IT foundations classes recruiting people who are either career changers or entry level," said Jenny Carmichael, marketing director for Tech901. "The average salary when they come to our classes is $21,000, and upon exiting with a certification, it bumps to $37,000. We're hoping with the grant money that we can continue the legacy and move forward allowing more Memphians to increase their wages with better jobs."

In order to meet demand for the IT Foundations class, Tech901 increased the number of students from 30 to 48. The grant money will cover the instructor fees, textbooks and some of the student vouchers for the class.

Another recipient, Neighbor Christian Centers, works to help those in need move toward stability and sustainability through Christ-centered ministries and empowerment programs. The Community Foundation grant will support Holistic Home Visitations, a program to identify those in the most need and help address those needs through partner services.

The grant will help fund the pilot program, which will serve 120 families at a Neighbor Christian Centers site within a Section 8 Housing Development.

"This grant allows us to connect to the community in a deeper way, and what better way than by a community-based organization supporting a community-based organization to show love and concern for the people in most need of our help," said Blair Perry of Tech901 instructs his students during an Oct. 18, 2018, IT Foundations course at the organization’s Crosstown Concourse campus. Tech901 was one of six local non-profits to recently receive a Community Foundation grant.

Ephie Johnson, president/CEO of Neighbor Christian Centers

Since 1969, the Community Foundation of Greater Memphis has worked to strengthen the community through philanthropy. In 2017, the organization awarded more than $718 million in grants to non-profit organizations and has more than 1,000 charitable funds with assets of nearly $470 million.
Junior Achievement educates and inspires young people to value free enterprise, business and economics. They are not financially literate. That’s exactly what Junior Achievement has been doing in Memphis and the Mid-South since 1955, teaching students from kindergarten through 12th grade entrepreneurship, financial literacy, and the importance of saving for the future.

More than 25,000 students are reached by JA’s programs each year, in more than 1,200 classrooms and each classroom needs a business. Businesses can adopt a JA project as a way of creating a corporate culture of giving back to the community, as well as team-building experiences for their business.

“The programs at JA are great equalizers, the students learn how to make their money work for them,” said Ellen Celoty, director of marketing and special events. “They learn how to live in the moment and prepare for their future. It’s not an either or.”

That type of strategic decision making has to be taught and learned, an important reason for giving students to promote their financial success.

Programs offered by JA, both at their Bluff City Town site or at a school include age and grade level appropriate financial literacy, personal finance, entrepreneurship, work readiness, personal budgeting, financial record keeping, business operations, investments, financial planning, and the free enterprise system.

Students are also taught the soft skills needed for students to be successful in advancing their careers.

Junior Achievement also offers job shadowing for High School students and other hands-on experiences for Elementary and Middle School students at their Finance Park, and BizTown. This is a very pivotal time for JA as financial literacy is needed now more than ever. At the same time, the number of volunteers who will teach and mentor the students increases as more schools request the JA programs.

Parents and educators value JA because they can see how it shapes the minds of our young people, and JK students score significantly higher on objective referenced tests than students not in a JA program.
